

A Glimpse into the Righteous Rides Summit

By Doug Sorensen

When you support an organization either financially or with your time or prayers, you have a right to know something about the people behind the group's name. Last month, Righteous Rides held their semi-annual Hub Summit at their headquarters in Truesdale, Missouri. Let me introduce you around.

First, there are our founders, Mark and Bret, two self-confessed automotive nerds or "gear-heads." They are funny and even funnier when they try to be funny!

But it is so obvious that they live their passion by being a true help to missionaries home on furlough. Pray for them as they seek to keep our vision clear.

Then, there are the real magicians, the true gear-heads who work in our shop, keeping our fleet of over 160 vans reliable and in top-shape. They are humble servants who do the near impossible task of keeping a van as dependable as when it joined the fleet.

The rest of the attendees were volunteers from all over the USA. Like the couple in Texas who drive two hours each direction to deliver vans to families flying into Dallas/Ft Worth. Or the "new kids on the block" who will service Newark and the Northeast. They picked up their first three vans at the summit and then drove 13 hours to get them back home and put them into service! And there are so many others: people who detail the vans, who shop for and make "Goodie Bags" for each missionary family member, and those who handle the gargantuan task of juggling all the reservations! All volunteers who do what they do because they believe in the task of spreading the "Good News of Jesus Christ."

So that is who we are, that is who you are supporting.

The Visitor Parking Podcast is starting this month! Stay tuned to hear from Righteous Rides missionaries.
